

How to help when someone is suicidal

If you believe someone is thinking about ending their life, it's natural to feel panic or even want to avoid thinking about it - however, there are a number of practical things you can do to help . . .

1. Let them know you are concerned

Tell them that you are concerned, and that you are there to help.

2. Ask if they are thinking about suicide and if they have made any plans

Talking about suicide will not make them take action

Asking shows that you care

Asking will help them talk about their feelings and plans - the first step to getting help.

3. Take action to get help now

Tell them that there are other options to suicide

Don't agree to keep their suicidal thoughts or plans a secret

Don't assume they will get better without help or that they will seek help on their own.

If the person is thinking about suicide, encourage them to

- Make an appointment with a GP - offer for someone to go along with them.
- Contact a counsellor or employee assistance program, family member or friend.
- Contact a specialist Helpline for information and advice.
- If a plan to end their life has been made
- Check if they are able to carry out this plan - do they have a time, place or method?
- Do what you can to keep them safe by removing access to items.
- Contact the Psychiatric Emergency Team at the local hospital and the police on 000,
- Report that the person is suicidal, has made a plan, and you fear for their safety.

4. Take care of yourself too

Look after yourself - it is emotionally demanding to support someone who is suicidal

Find someone to talk things over with - colleagues, family, friends or a Helpline.

Factors that increase the risk of suicide include

- Expressing feelings of hopelessness and helplessness
- Being socially isolated
- Having a recent loss - relationship, death, job
- Making a previous suicide attempt
- Having a friend, family member or work colleague who has died by suicide
- Having a mental illness
- Behaving in a risky manner - drugs, alcohol abuse, driving recklessly.
